Williamson—On March 31st, state folklorist Emily Hilliard brings the West Virginia Folklife Program's statewide folklife survey to the Williamson Public Library, 101 Logan St., with a public interest meeting entitled "What is Folklore?" The 4:30p.m. event is free and open to the public.

Over the course of this year, Hilliard is conducting a statewide fieldwork survey to assess and document current folklife activity in West Virginia. "Folklife traditions are community-based creative expressions," Hilliard said. "Those can include traditional music and dance, foodways, material culture, faith-based expressions, occupational lore, and more." At the meeting, Hilliard will give a brief presentation on folklore and then take feedback from the public on local traditions, traditional artists, and tradition bearers in their community.

Hilliard stresses the importance of community involvement in this folklife survey. "This work is about honoring and supporting the creative contributions of West Virginians. We welcome public input on those traditions and tradition bearers valued by local people." This meeting follows a similar event in Charleston earlier in March and in the coming months, Hilliard will hold similar gatherings in other communities across the state.

The West Virginia Folklife Program is a project of the West Virginia Humanities Council and is supported in part by the National Endowment for the Arts (NEA) Folk & Traditional Arts Program. West Virginia Folklife is dedicated to the documentation, preservation, presentation, and support of West Virginia's vibrant cultural heritage and living traditions.
